

Some Help For Customers Who Are Thinking About Suspending Service For The Winter:

We at R.Dana Pest Control always have our customers, and how to better serve them, in mind. Our findings have been that our technicians keep better control of ants, spiders and general invader insects if we monitor and inspect your home twice during the winter months. While most ants enter a dormant state during the coldest months if their colonies are in exterior walls, some homes have other issues that homeowners were unaware of. Some examples of this would be termite tubes, Carpenter Ants that can remain active in the dead of winter, or mice looking for a warm place to repopulate.

We propose making an appointment in the fall to set up insect monitors in areas that would be potential active areas within the home. We would then re-inspect twice during the colder months to make sure everything was under control. If activity was found, our technicians would treat accordingly. This would help in preventing unexpected infestations, and would guarantee priority scheduling in the very busy spring season. This preventative service would be beneficial to both our customers and employees.

Clients who have previously signed up have had their spring start-up fee waived, and have had less activity throughout the year.

R. Dana Pest Control wishes all of their customers a wonderful Fall and Winter!
